

WOMEN EMPOWERMENT TURNING A DECADES LESSONS

**DHANYA.N & KULATH HAAZIQ NAWAB KUTTY.R

Nearly 49.6% of world population comprises of women .Out of this more than 50% are from rural area and are mostly from under developed places. Women play a vital role in the development of a family, society and the country .they became a significant minority section nowadays.Empowering them is very important for the progress of a nation. When we think about empowering women the first thing which strikes all our mind is to develop them , to encourage them,improve them etc. but in actual sense just making them available for all the welfare policies and laws created by the government which in turn makes a clear path for reaching the target. India being a developing country and possessing more number of people who completely depend on agriculture for their livelihood, hence most of the women are nearer from rural areas.<sup>1</sup>Indian government has provided lots of facilities and potential for their development. Several laws are also implemented all around the world which include millinium development goals and sustainable development goals etc which supports women in different sectors. Women over several places has limited access to the resources available for them like quality education , technology ,health schemes etc. even in this millinium women are facing so many oroblems in different places which includes public places ,family, workplace,friendship circle etc .Here the author will be discussing about the need of empowerment of women and their relation for the development of a company. The author will also be conscentrating on several cases where ruralwomenhas faced lots of problems in this society.

KEY WORDS: Women empowerment , development ,resources ,rural women ,social problems.

---