

ABSTRACT

TRIBAL WELFARE: CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION AND DEVELOPMENT MEASURES

Dr. Mamata Kyatannavar¹

The Constitutional Law is a principle of legal document. It is abounding with ideologies having binding force. Constitutional provisions are living instruments to safeguard not only for general people and safeguard the tribal people in particular. Special Constitutional provisions are not arbitrary discrimination but are protective discrimination that is indispensable for tribal development in India. Constitutional framers made some provisions for the development of tribes' people. The special provisions are aimed to prevent discrimination against the tribal people to protect their rights. It enhance the standard of living of tribal people socially and economically to see them in the mainstream of the society. It was the credit of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar who had faced with several problems from birth to death of his life because of social evils practices. This paper is made as an attempt to explore the constitutional provisions for tribal safeguards and their development in India.

Keywords: Constitution, Principles, discrimination, evil.

¹ Assistant Professor of Law, Vidyodaya Law College, Tumakuru